HOW THE ENGLISH ACCEPT THE AWARD.

The spirit in which the English newspapers have accepted the award of the Behring Sea arbitrator's tribunal is very encouraging to those who hope that this arbitration is a solid and substantial step taken by the world towards a general consensus that differences between nations shall hereafter be settled by peaceful methods instead of war. As far as we have seen, these newspapers have accepted the result with thorough good nature and an entire acquiescence. It is true that the Arbitrator's Tribunal sustained England on every disputed point in issue between the two countries. Nevertheless, in practically forbidding pelagic sealing for the future, except under restrictions that will make it very nearly, if not quite, unprofitable, it has denied to England's Canadian subjects the only thing that interested them in the least. So that while England carries off all the honors in the case, barring our loss of national prestige and the pecuniary damages for unlawful seizures that we chall probably have to pay, we secure the thing that is of practical willity, the future protection of the seal hard.

The London Times and the London Spectator both look upon the fact that the Tribunal held unflinchingly to what has always been understood to be the internatic. law of the case as of incalculable advantage to the future of international arbitration. The London Times says on this point:

"While a substantial majority was indispensable to the meral authority of the decision, it was, perhaps, of even greater moment that the decision should be in accordance with established legal doc ther the claim by derivative title advanced ther the claim by derivative title advanced by America, or her claim to a new and unheard-of proprietary title in the scal was valid, all reliance upon the accepted teachings of international law must nec-essarily have been shaken. The whole system would have been unsettled and confused, and endless new difficulties would have been interposed to the peaceful settlement of international dis-putes. The award has averted both peaceful settlement of international dis-putes. The award has averted both these dangers. The freedom of the sea as hitherto recognized by all civilized States for over a hundred years, has been vindicated and reasserted, and the theory that any mass of misty metaphysica and exaggerated sentimentality is law enough for an international fribunal has received a decisive, and it may be hoped a final, rebuff."

The Spectator says:

"The country is to be congratulated on the decision of the tribunal created under the treaty of Washington, to decide on the merits of the seal controversy. We say merits of the seal controversy. We say this, not merely because the United Kingdom has sustained its contentions, or, to use the language of civil sultors, has won its case. The victory achieved for the cause of arbitration is far more important that that secured for England.

whelming majority of the party they rebut one course adopted by them, and that is to give the people a primary.

As far as we can learn but a very meagre faction of the Democrats of this

It has been shown that two great nations can consent to refer a heated dispute to arbitration, that they can agree upon, and can establish, a tribunal thoroughly competent to try the issues both from the point of view of fairness and of ability to understand the subtle points of law in dispute. It may be said without exaggeration that not only was the claim of the Americans to special rights over seals swimming in the free and open water of the high seas, on trial in Paris, but the whole subject of arbitration. If the decision had been given against the natural moment that one of its members would have been hopelessly damaged—not only here, but throughout the world."

It is without hesitation that we add It has been shown that two great na-

It is without hesitation that we add cur own unqualified endorsement to what these two English newspapers say "Jingoists Blaine and Harrison had dragged the United States into positions that were wholly untenable, under the code of international laws, from any standpoint whatever. If therefore the arbitration was to be of any service to the human race outside of averting a war between England and America, it was abcolutely essential that those plain propositions of international law, which England stood on, and Messra. Blaine and Harrison endeavored to set aside, should be absolutely and unqualifiedly maintained in their fullest integrity. No man can tell the value to the world of the simple fact that this has been done. It has inspired a degree of confidence in arbitration which nothing else whatever could have aroused, and it's promise for the future of good to mankind is beyond the power of human ken.
It is interesting to quote in this connection what the Spectator has to say of the possibility of a high man acting in that character even when the interests of his own country are at stake. It says: Let us recall for a moment what the enemies of arbitration and then examine their view in the light of events. In the first place, it was said that arbitrations always go against England, and that therefore it is foolish for England to Next, it was alleged that, whatever the merits, the American Judges would simply act as advocates on the Bench. Americans, we are told, are really patriotic-very different in this respect from Engineering and old list men-and still believe in the good old maxim, "My country, right or wrong." They would therefore simply endorse the American case, however absurd or exag-gerated it might be. Besides, even if the American Judges wanted to be fair, they would not dare to be so, for it was well understood that no man who voted according to his conscience and against his country's interests would over dare to show his face in Washington again. He would be flayed alive if he did. Next, it was freely declared that the foreign nem-bers of the Court would not attempt to decide the case fairly, but would consider which of the two States involved it would pay best to support; or if not, would at any rate let their verdict fall on the side which would involve the acceptance of general principles which might prove fa-vorable to the contentions of the arbitrating power on some other occasion. In other words, arbitration was pronounced a sham and a delusion, and as necessarily and inevitably injurious to England. At the very best, it was but an elaborats way of giving up one's just rights at the denand of another power. Let us see in the light of these com-

Let us see in the light of these com-plaints against arbitration what has ac_ tually happened in the present case. In the first place, the award has been given in favor of England. Next, the American fudges did not simply say "ditto" to their advocates. Mr. Justice Harlan for the most part wave his vote on the side on advocates. Mr. Justice Harlan for the most part save his vote on the side on which Lord Hannen gave his, and Joined with the majority of the court in virtually upholding the contentions put forward by England. It would be the height of bad taste to praise Mr. Justice Harlan for thus discharging a plain duty honorably and well. No one who knows the character of the great tribunal to which he belongs would suppose for a moment that one of its members would decide a point of law except as his conscience and honor directed him.

Rather it must be a matter of envy that it should have failen to the lot of a judge

It should have fallen to the lot of a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States afAmerica, rather than to one of our own judges, to prove to the world that the judges of the two braches of the anglo-Saxon race, when it is their duty o do equal justice, not between party and party in a civil suit, but between two creat and sovereign nations, will do it of nationality. Mr. Justice Harian has shown that he would no more lean to-wards America when sitting on a Court of Arbitration than he would lean towards the side of his own State in a case argued before him in the Supreme Court at

This is a very hundsome compliment to a very great judge of a very great tribunal, and those who know his record in that tribunal know that it is deserv-

Upon the whole the results to follow from this arbitration promise such great things that we may possibly forgive Blaine and Harrison their folly in getting us into the scrape, which is however, to cost us a good round sum in damages for the English vessels that they seized.

THE CHOICE OF A SENATOR.

We hope to see the day when our Senstors will be elected by direct vote of the people, and we may say parenthetically, we hope to see the same thing about the judges of the Court of Appeals; but as this is not now practicable, the will of the people should be ascertained as nearly as possible, and it would be instructive and possibly influential, if local meetings of Democrats throughout the State-not only of counties, but of districts-would pass resolutions, as they did in Middlesex, recommending to the Legislature the man of their choice for United States Senator. The question is, whom do the people · limited

THE PRIMARY.

The City Committee has been called for Tuesday evening to consider the question of the method of choosing our nominces for the Legislature.

As we said a week ago, the nomination of these candidates in this city and Senatorial district is equivalent to the election, and therefore all the established methods of ascertaining the true wiches of the people should be adopted in making the nomination, that would be used in an election, it being but another name for the same thing. The idea of having representatives sent to the Legislature, to speak for the whole body of the people, that have been chosen by a few hundred packed voters, under ciscumstances forbidding the expression of the popular voice, would be an outrage upon Democratic government. We cannot believe that when the attention of our committee has been fairly called to this subject ject; when upon the least inquiry they can assure themselves that the overwhelming majority of the party they re-city desire a convention, and they are beleived to have their plans made out for the purpose of forestalling the expression of popular will. Whether this is true or not, this is a case in which the Committee "should avoid even the ap-pearance of evil."

If a slate has been made by any cabal it should be smashed.

PROFESSIONAL TRADERS.

Perhaps it is more important now than It has ever been in the world's history, that all of us should be wide awake and do with all our might, whatever our hands find to do, so great is competition. And it is not easy for any one to make an idea all in all his study, without being very effectually flavored with it. And yet it is a bad thing for the individual to be lost or utterly immersed in his business and to give up the privilege of life for success. Public opinion resents it, and general social life punishes him that so cheapens his manhood, by branding him as a mere trader and profes sional, it matters not what the calling be it low or high. The highest official is a bore if he is all full of his office. If a king is nothing but a king he is a very stupid thing, and very poor company; he is a slave to a very few ideas, and men play for him and spend their lives in checkmating him. On the other hand, full autumn changes. if the poorest man is very indifferent to food, clothing and idle pleasures, and organized a "Betwixt-Season Sale" gives himself to cultivation and realization of noble thoughts and honorable affections and fresh natural feelings and good 'sense, he is a lord of creation,-royal; and every nobleman of nature is happy in his company and friendship. There is hardly a respectable family in the South that has not seen and honored the purest gold of character in Uncle Daniel or Aunt Delphy. All can recall occasions on which those excellent people have made big sacrifices for them, and disdained to show the professional or trader in what they did. "Miss Mary I did'n expect you to pay me for it." And their well bred masters and mistresses have known how to honor and accept their generosity and take their own time and way to return it-not hurt their feelings by immediate payment nor make light of their magnanimity. The old regime of Southern highness and domestic honor has not passed and never will pass away. The true nobility of England and good breeding of the South have excluded the trader and professional from the sphere of decent life. Birth, caste, wealth education, society, are not the power that can give or refuse, accept or ex clude men or women from real privilege and honor, but it is the power of a sound wholesome, genteel, chaste, sensible natural and humane and irresistible public opinion, the conscience and supreme court of Christian civilization. And this mysterious royalty rules. It approves and advances in the charmed circle of genteel life, or condemns and punishes and quietly banishes all offenders against its spirit and laws, poor or rich, low or high. Domestic life and social intercourse are high privileges. Neither airs and graces and Sunday clothes, nor the latest and highest styles and fashions are the repulsites,-"the thing,"-but clean hands and a pure heart, a mind purged from the business thoughts and cares and incidents of the court, the hospital or the market, or the common gossip or scandals of the streets. A decent social life does not allow the talking of business or the talking of the shops; no pedantry of any sort. And few are so obtuse as not to know that law, however they may venture in its face. Nor does the ex conclusion confine itself to social life in very fact, and in the common occupations of life men concede the trader and pro fessional as against good manners. And the pedant in every style is an accepted and the best in every calling and employment keep the professional and trader in the back ground, while they do their work as human beings living together for mutual good, unconsciously guarding their manhood and self-respect. The best practice of a profession and pursuit of trade cultivates good manners and utilizes the ways of high life, after a fashion and to a certain extent at least. This is the poetry of business, and where this is not there the exchange market or professional arena are not many removes from th beer garden or the jungis.
